The prophet Amos speaks to the people on behalf of God and warns them to be honest and upright in their dealings with people, especially with the poor and those who have no voice, and to protect them from the unscrupulous. He warns against being pious on the one hand and then carrying out sinful deeds on the other, especially at the expense of the vulnerable in society. In all things, God sees everything and will deal with people according to what they have done.

Our gospel passage sees Jesus warning the people about the dangers of money and wealth. In the parable, an absentee landlord has been told that his steward was not doing his job properly. The landlord believes the story and intends dismissing the steward and so the steward tries to protect his future while also getting even with the landlord. The landlord hears of this, too, and praises the steward which seems rather odd, but it conforms to the idea that in the Kingdom there is no retaliation. Jesus affirms that money is necessary but also says that those who are dishonest when it comes to money will also prove themselves dishonest when it comes to real treasure, which is the Kingdom of God. Money and wealth are important and necessary but they have the ability to corrupt, as is shown in the text. The passage finishes with Jesus reminding the people that, in reality, they can only serve one master and, therefore, they have an important choice to make: to serve God or to pay lip-service to God while serving the material things of this world. One will lead to eternal life while the other will lead to death.

A sincere thank you to all those who contributed to the Autumn Collection for the support of the priests of the diocese and parish. Your support is very much appreciated.

Singing with the Choir

Our choirs would like to encourage all those attending Mass to join with them in singing the hymns, responsorial psalms and parts of the Mass. The choirs are always happy to have new people join them and those interested can speak to the members after Mass. In particular, the Faithlegg Choir would like to have an accompanist so that they can sing on Saturday evenings.
